THE author would notify the purchaser that he puts the price of one dollar on this book of advice, well knowing that 75 cents would be enough for the common price of a book of its size. He is conscious that propriety, perspicuity and brevity will be found marked on every piece—and if so, the shorter the better.

But those who do not chuse to allow him 25 cents for his advice, may desist from the purchase. He conceives that these advices are calculated to assist every citizen in the preservation of his health, and his recovery if diseased; so that by attending to them, he may easily receive 30, 60, or an 100 fold for his dollar: by which he may also meet the wished for assistance set forth in simples and preparations, that will be in his own power.

Besides, if a physician must be employed, the boss, or head of the family, ought to know so much about the work he hires his artist to do, as to be able to estimate the value of it. He claims this 25 cents as a small compensation for the labor and observations of fifty years, without having made his labor an emolument of advantage heretofore to himself or family.

The author is well aware that the public mind has been long impressed with these ideas: viz. "The natives of our own country are in possession of cures, simples, &c. that surpass what is used by our best practitioners." He conceives this publication will gratify such generally, whose minds remain under such impressions.

He presumes to add, that he conceives nature has made him a physician; and that to the best of his recollection, he has always remembered every thing that he has ever met with in a medical way, that he has counted valuable. In his youth he had a strong desire to become a student of physic, that he might act with propriety therein as a regular practitioner, but he was somehow providentially prevented; and it now appears to him, that his opportunities have been just such as to allow him to roam in search of every thing in the science of diseases, and their cure, and at length to satisfy himself, that generally speaking, his knowledge is accurate, and the prescriptions he has been able to make will be found valuable.

As diseases radically are but few, and may be all cured by but a few medicines, he conceives he has prescribed enough here for general use, and that they are the best that he has gained knowledge of.
