A COLLECTION OF FORMULÆ

INTENDED TO ILLUSTRATE THE FOREGOING PRECEPTS,

and to furnish the inexperienced Prescriber

WITH A SERIES OF

USEFUL AND INSTRUCTIVE LESSONS.

Explanation of the Key Letters.

The Modus Operandi of the different elements of each formula is designated by a Key Letter, or Symbol, which is printed in a different type, (thus B) and placed in the margin opposite to each. This letter refers to a corresponding one in the Synopsis, and thereby shows the division containing an exposition of the principle upon which the operation of the ingredient is supposed to depend.

Two or more Key Letters denote that the element against which they are so placed has several modes of operation, whilst the order in which the letters succeed each other, serves to show the relative importance of them.

Where any one of the letters is small, i. e. not a capital, it denotes that the operation which it is intended to express is only incidental to, or subordinate in, the general scheme of the combination.

When any number of elements are included within a vinculum or bracket, it is intended to show that they operate but as one substance, or, that the virtues of each are not independent of the other; in this case the Key Letter within the bracket expresses upon what principle this unity depends, whilst that on the exterior shows the action of such a combination upon the base, or the part which it performs in the general scheme of the Formula.

Let us exemplify it by a reference to Formula 78, which presents us with a Purgative, in conjunction with a Stimulant. The base is Aloes, which is succeeded by Scammony, and Extract of Rhubarb; these substances appear by the bracket, to act in unison, a concurrence which the interior letter B shows to depend upon their being Similar Remedies; the letter also on the exterior shows that its operation upon the base depends upon the same principle. We next come to powdered Capsicum, and Oil of Cloves; these ingredients are also shown by a bracket to act in unity, and the letter B in the interior, denotes that it is in consequence of their possessing a similar mode of action, whilst the letter G on the exterior, announces that they act in the general scheme for the purpose of fulfilling a second indication; at the same time the smaller letter c informs us that the combination likewise acts as a corrector of the base.*

* In my Lectures I have usually employed different colours for the purpose of expressing the objects of each ingredient in a formula; in this manner very useful and instructive charts might be constructed: this hint may perhaps induce the industrious student, who is anxious to become a master in the art of prescribing, to attempt a synopsis upon this plan.

Infundatur primum lagenæ aqua, deinde immittantur Salina, et denique Acidum Sulphuricum; illico obturetur lagena, et in loco frigido servetur.

NOTE.—The decompositions which take place in this formula are described in the Essay on the Art of Prescribing, p. 174. There is, however, a precaution respecting the proportion of Sulphuric acid which it is essential to remember, viz.—that it should never be added in excess; for in that case the Sulphate of Iron would not undergo the necessary decomposition.

* This formula is introduced as a combination supported by authority, although it may be questioned whether its adoption can be sanctioned upon principle. Let us decipher the intention of the different ingredients by their Key Letters. The basis is Squill, to which Digitalis is added, for the purpose we perceive of acting in unison with it, and Calomel, which succeeds it, is intended to promote and direct the diuretic Basis; two fœtid gums next present themselves to our notice, and these are shown by the bracket to exert a combined action, depending, as the Key Letter announces, upon the medicinal similarity, but acting in the general scheme of the formula, as shown by the exterior letter, for the purpose of fulfilling a second indication, distinct and different from that which the Basis is designed to answer, i. e. to produce, not a diuretic, but an antispasmodic and stimulant effect; an important question then arises for our consideration.—Is the latter part of the formula consistent with the former, or is the stimulant effect of the Gums compatible with the sedative operation of Digitalis?
